I am a partner at Venable LLP in its healthcare and corporate practice groups. I have spent my 25+ year career at the intersection of healthcare, law, and business advising healthcare industry clients, including investors, lenders, providers, and suppliers, on a broad range of regulatory and corporate matters. I write for a number of industry publications and speak at industry and professional events. I also teach healthcare law and other healthcare management and policy topics at the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health and the School of Health Sciences and Practice at New York Medical College. I am excited to be joining the Alumni Board during our centennial year. As we emerge from a pandemic and the pace of technological advancement and data collection changes how we address public health, I am committed to working with our Board, alumni, faculty and students to put us at the forefront of advancing public health through the next 100 years.
