

Latinx Fellowship Program

2021

PURPOSE

The Latinx Fellowship Program is designed to support the development of early-career public health professionals committed to addressing the increasing health disparities faced by a growing Latinx population in the United States. One fellowship will be offered each year to a student pursuing their Masters of Public Health (MPH) in the Heilbrunn Department of Population and Family Health (HDPFH).

FELLOWSHIP ELIGIBILITY

Eligibility for the fellowship is contingent on admission as a two-year full-time MPH student in the HDPFH at the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health. In addition, to be eligible for the fellowship, applicants must be:

- Conversant in Spanish
- An early-career professional with at least two years of previous work experience with Latinx communities in the US and/or a country with a large population of Latinx immigrants living in the US
- Committed to working with Latinx populations in the US following completion of the degree
- Eligible for Financial Aid.

Individuals with advanced degrees (MD, PhD) are not eligible for the Fellowship. Candidates may only apply once for Fellowship consideration.

THE ACADEMIC PROGRAM

The MPH program in the HDPFH prepares students to develop, implement, administer, and evaluate programs and policies within the fields of sexual, reproductive, child, adolescent, and family health and the health of displaced and migrant populations. The Department utilizes a human rights framework, and addresses these areas within a global context. One particular area of focus and collaboration for the Department is the community of Washington Heights, where the Mailman School is located. HDPFH-affiliated programs in the community provide rich and varied training opportunities for students. Students bring impressive and diverse experiences in domestic and international health programs to the department and School. More information about our academic program can be found on our website.

WHAT FELLOWS RECEIVE

Fellows will receive half tuition up to the maximum of 60 credits in the Master of Public Health degree at the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health in the two-year full-time MPH program.

HOW TO APPLY

In addition to their application for admission to the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health, students interested in the fellowship must submit the following materials:

- Application for the Latinx Fellowship Program emailed by March 15th, 2021. The application can be found in the submit pages of this document.
- Application for Financial Aid: <http://publichealth.columbia.edu/apply/financial-aid>

SELECTION AND NOTIFICATION OF FELLOWS

The selection of fellows involves several considerations. After confirming the applicant meets the eligibility criteria for the Fellowship, the Selection Committee considers the applicant's potential to contribute to the field of public health and commitment to working with Latinx populations. The Selection Committee may request an interview with a candidate.

Fellowship applicants can expect to receive notification of the status of their application to the Latinx Fellowship Program by early April. Notification of admission to the School is sent separately.
